Tools to promote intercultural learning for living in diverse societies

INTERCULTURAL LEARNING

The aims of the Intercultural Learning for Pupils and Teachers project is to provide teachers and youth workers offering activities in schools with new methods and tools to promote intercultural dialogue in order to prepare pupils for living in diverse societies and working in a global labour market, this ranges from dealing with diversified groups of learners coming from different cultures to valorize mobility experiences

A particular focus is put on upper secondary students, their teachers and youth workers, because at this age values and ideas on society are formed and the first mobility experiences take place.

Our work addresses the lack of training on Intercultural Learning for teachers who therefore struggle to include this content in their lessons and cross-curricular approaches at school and have no tools to assess it.

What we provide

Training course

To develop intercultural competence of young people, educators need to improve their own intercultural competence and understand how other people think, feel and act. It is not only about people from different cultures, but also overcoming differences within our own culture.

The course will be downloadable from January 2018

Toolbox

The project is developing a toolbox to include intercultural learning across the school curriculum. It will address how to learn from and about diversity in the classroom, in the community and through mobility experiences.

The toolbox will be downloadable from July 2017

Studies & Policy recommendations

The project will investigate how to include intercultural learning in teachers' education and in secondary school curricula, looking also at how study periods abroad can be recognised.

The studies and policy recommendations will be downloadable from July 2018
